This document was developed by the Chesapeake Institute, Washington, D.C., as part of contract #HS92017001 from the Office of Special Education Programs, Office of Special Education and Rehabilitative Services, United States Department of Education. The points of view expressed in the books, videos, programs, and other materials in this publication are those of the authors and do not necessarily reflect the position or policy of the U.S. Department of Education. The materials listed were not selected, approved, or reviewed in any way; nor does mention of trade names, commercial products, or organizations imply endorsement by the U.S. government. Neither the inclusion or omission of any item is intended to be taken as any indicator of its quality. Many of the included titles can be ordered through a local book store as well as through the sources listed here. We encourage the reproduction and distribution of this directory.

CHOOSING MATERIALS

Reading these lists of resources, educators and parents may wonder how they can tell which materials would best suit their needs. Douglas Carnine, director of the National Center to Improve the Tools of Educators (funded by the U.S. Department of Education's Office of Special Education Programs), suggests that schools and individuals follow a six-step process of evaluation. Before choosing a new book or program, potential purchasers should ask themselves:

1. Are the approach and its outcomes clearly defined?
2. Do instructional research findings indicate that the method is effective?
3. Is an accountability system for teaching and learning built into the method?
4. Is the method sustainable?
5. For which groups of students is the method equitable?
6. Are the costs of the method and its implementation reasonable?

The claims of publishers and other producers should be carefully examined and substantiated before implementing any new approach. Parents and teachers should not assume any one source is the final word. Instead, they should examine the information from several sources. The most reliable information will be the consensus among these different sources.
